

Depopulation Crisis - When Numbers Don't Add Up, You've been Cheated

by Jean Perier on New Eastern Outlook

The population of the Earth today is just over 7.6 billion people. Up until the 1970s, the world's population would grow in accordance with a hyperbolic formula discovered by the Austrian physicist Heinz von Foerster.

Most recently, as sociologists were bracing for a demographic record, birth rates have suddenly come to a stall. Since the 90s, there's been a noticeable slowdown in the growth of the population of the planet. Previously, it was predicted that by 2015 the world's population would exceed 9.3 billion people, but in reality it barely reached 7.5 billion people. The UN would regularly issue forecasts titled World Population Prospects, with the latest of them stating that by 2030 the world's population may reach 8.6 billion people, closing to 9.8 billion mid-century.

One can observe a noticeable decline in birth rates even in those regions of the world where one couldn't expect it to occur at all, that is Africa, Southeast Asia, the Caribbean. In turn, the United States, Canada, and all of Europe has been in the negative for decades, facing grim depopulation prospects. Over the past 15 years, in many countries, the traditional large families would be replaced by the so-called statistical average, that is families that have no more than 6–7 kids per family today, would have 12–14 children born two decades ago.

These days, one can come across all kinds of articles written by so-called futurologists that explain that the globalization process has come to a close, thus arguing that the planet doesn't need as many workers as it used to, as one machine would replace ten people. Therefore, they argue, dropping birth rates is nothing but a natural process.

However, such assessments do nothing to encourage Europe, especially against the background of the skyrocketing migration rates that occur against the backdrop of a massive decline in birth rates across the Old World. Thus, the EU is facing an impending identity change in the coming years.

In order to try and increase the birth rates, a country can use a complicated set of tactics and tools. Among them are educational plans and financial benefits that are provided to the growing families. In Northern Europe, for example, governments would try to boost birth rates by allowing erotical content to enter the mass media back in the 80s. Back then it seemed promising that as cold climates are usually associated with lower birth rates, but this tactics failed to produce the expected result.

Today, the problem of fertility has become, perhaps, one of the more important aspects of sociological, political, and military research.

At the congress of the International Federation of Gynecology and Obstetrics (FIGO) that took place in 2006 in Kuala Lumpur, participants highlighted the rising rates of undeveloped pregnancies, while the latest FIGO congress in Rio de Janeiro devoted most of its time to this topic. There's no answer as to why fetus would stop developing in healthy women. As FIGO states, the rate of undeveloped pregnancies across the globe has increased significantly: in recent years, the number of reported non-developing pregnancies has increased from 20% to 46%. Every year there are more and more such cases registered across the world and physicians are now forced to recognize this phenomenon as an epidemic. But if epidemics of the past had an underlying natural cause, no one seem to be able to spot it here. Nothing seem to affect the growing severity of this problem.

In this situation, one can't help but recall the US secret service programs on depopulation, the purpose of which was to artificially reduce the population according with the ideas of the 18th century English political economist Thomas Robert Malthus. Involuntarily, one starts thinking about the rhetorics voiced by the founder of Microsoft Bill Gates, who argued that the population of our planet must be reduced to the "golden billion", thus advocating eugenics. Gates made his remarks to the invitation-only Long Beach, California TED2010 Conference, in a speech titled, "Innovating to Zero!." Back then he stated that he would expect vaccines to be used to reduce population growth. It's been humorously noted that when Bill Gates speaks about vaccines, he speaks with authority.

In particular, one could remind the reader that back in 1974, at the request of Nixon's administration, the DoD, the CIA and the National Security Council developed the so-called National Security Study Memorandum 200, that identified ways in which Washington would try to trigger depopulation on a global scale. Among the targets of this approach were the so-called Third World countries and, above all, those states that the US regards as its colonies.

One's suspicions about the involvement of US intelligence agencies in the deliberate reduction of the world's population have been confirmed by a great many incidents that have occurred across the globe over recent decades. In particular, such countries as Mexico and the Philippines suffered a terrible fate in the mid-90s, when the US used the WHO channels to ship vaccines to these countries that were allegedly aimed at protecting local population from tetanus. However this so-called assistance led to a drastic increase in the number of registered miscarriage pregnancies. A study of the vaccine showed that it contained human chorionic gonadotropin (hCG) hormone that would stop the natural development of the fetus, leading to miscarriage. Back then the US government would quickly adopt a law that would stop any foreign entities from prosecuting the Big Pharma for the shipment of this vaccine.

Yet another example of criminal meddling aimed at the reduction of the world's population is the recent scandal in Kenya that revealed that Western doctors would sterilize millions of women across Africa under the guise of tetanus vaccination program conducted by the World Health Organization and UNICEF. Those accusations were voiced by the Association of Catholic Doctors of Kenya, which found in the same hCG in the vaccines shipped to the Dark Continent.

As noted in the report of the Association of Catholic Doctors of Kenya, African countries have been a test site for the Big Pharma for decades that would test the effects of vaccinations, genetic changes associated with certain drugs, reactions to various infections, viruses, and so on the local population without even notifying it, let alone obtaining informed consent. These "studies" are run by private pharmaceutical companies, the Pentagon's Infectious Diseases Service, the CIA, the so-called biolabs that American intelligence agencies would scatter all across the world, like the notorious Richard Lugar Center in Georgia, funded by the well-known Bill Gates Foundation.

Recent media reports have also revealed that tobacco plantations across the United States have been artificially infected with an unknown virus that increases the risk of lip, mouth, throat and lung cancer in smokers. Those reports can be confirmed by a simple comparison of the incredibly low number of lung cancer cases in smokers pre-1950 in comparison with today's figures. There's also reports that Malathion, a nervous gas developed by the Nazis during the Second World War, would be sprayed from helicopters along the densely populated areas of Arizona and California. The official explanation is that the gas kills pests arriving from the Mediterranean. But the paradox is that gas would be sprayed on residential areas instead of fields.

As reported in a publication of The Age magazine, an Australian microbiologist and Nobel laureate Sir Frank Macfarlane Burnet urged the Australian government to develop biological weapons against "over-populated countries of Southeast Asia" in 1947. During a secret meeting in 1947 with The New Weapons and Equipment Development Committee microbiologists recommended "to form a research group tasked to create biological weapons that could be unleashed by contaminating foods supplies in order to control the population of Indonesia and other countries."

Also, a secret program under the codename Project Coast was established in South Africa by US intelligence services to pursue pretty much the same goals back in 1984. Under this program the viruses known as Marburg and Ebola were tested on the black population of South Africa under the direct supervision of the US Centers for Disease Control.

By the way, an abrupt increase in the volumes of GMO modified products being planted and the recent UN forecast predicting a rapid increase in food prices are hardly a coincidence, those are also a part of the program aimed at artificially reducing the world's population.

So, with all those facts being known to the media for a long time, how much longer will it take for the international community to persecute the criminal activities of Western financial elites aimed at the extermination of the population of our planet?
